Notes for Stanley Percy HASS:

Stanley Percival Hass applied for his social security number 345-10-1152 in 1936 at the age of 37.

Generation 3 (cont.)

He lived in Hinsdale, Illinois and worked for a manufacturing company, which had a branch in Chicago, Illinois.

Stanley P Hass was a practical joker. He used to take all kinds of ga-joke tricks, like a handshake buzzer, with him every time he went back to Canada to visit family. The best was the time he put a whoopie cushion under his mother's chair. She was a little old lady then. When she sat down it was hilarious. His face was red and he didn't stop laughing for two weeks.

It is thought that he moved with his wife to California in 1944.

A letter written to Grandson, David W. Hass, dated August 4th, 1960, reads as follows:
Dear Rattlesnake Dave! Over the weekend I went to our hilly desert after a terrific battle I was successful in being the victor over "Pete". It was a gloomy day so the ten and twenty foot rattlers kept away from me. They were either afraid of me or didn't like the smell of y hair tonic, or maybe my feet. I removed the venom from Pete. Since he will be growing up in a domestic atmosphere he should be a good pal to Theodore. Poor Pete is in a serious condition temporarily. In chasing him in the desert I awakened a 300 pound wolf who stepped on his back and crushed it. Our vet saved his life by attaching or inserting a means of furnishing oxygen to his little lungs. I know with your care and nursing this equipment may be discarded in the near future, Rattlesnake Dave. Pete's father, mother, and little brother join me in wishing you much future happiness together. Pete's diet consists of burrs, Canadian thistles, rose thorns, toe nails, and snails as a tenderizer. Nice striking, Grandpa "Python" Hass

"He had a parakeet named "Petey." On our trip in 1960, when we visited there, this bird could talk and everything. They would let him out and he would fly all over their house in Pasadena. In their fenced in backyard, they had a tortoise that would live in the corner that I liked to go and look at. They had a lot of hummingbirds and fruit trees." David W. Hass, June 1996.

"I only saw him twice, when we went out to California (about 1960 and 1967). He had a pink Cadillac with a Bermuda carriage bell he would ding and kids would laugh at it." David W Hass, 20 Jul 2018

Before retiring, Stan was with Royal Typewriter as a sales manager. They lived at 3611 Copeland Place, Los Angeles, California. While he was retired, he worked as a night watchman at Max Factor.

Stanley P. Hass was diagnosed with prostate cancer in the summer of 1970. In 1971, four months after being diagnosed with cancer of the lungs and spine, spinal surgery was done, which left him bedridden with paralysis from the waist down for the three months until his death at 73 years old on January 25, 1972. He suffered from terminal bronchopneumonia his last two days.

Grandson David W. Hass has Stanley's green felt beret from a club in Toronto, where Stanley was once a member,

Dorothy Edith DUBRICK was buried on 19 Sep 1993 in Live Oaks Cemetery, Monrovia, California.

Notes for Dorothy Edith DUBRICK:

Notes for Donald Albert DROWN:

Donald Albwert Drown was a WWII POW. He survived the Bataan Death March. (Bataan is a peninsula on an island in the Philippines. It was to Bataan that American and Filipino forces retreated from Manila. General MacArthur and brave defenders withstood devastating Japanese attack for many weeks in 1942. After General MacArthur's transfer to Australia in March of 1942, General Wainright took command of the defending forces. When supplies and reinforcements were prevented from reaching American's armed forces on the peninsula by Japanese intervention, the defenders were weakened by disease, malnutrition, and exhaustion. Ceaseless battle marked the last fifteen days of Bataan's resistance. Although many broken troops took refuge on Corregidor, approximately 35,000 American and Filipino combat troops were taken prisoner when Bataan Peninsula fell to the Japanese invader on April 8, 1942. The prisoners' forced march to captivity is known as the Bataan Death March because harsh treatment and starvation caused the deaths of nearly 10,000 men.)

Notes for Stanley Irvin HASS:

"My grandfather, Stanley HASS got drafted into the third ARMY two weeks out of high school. He was inducted in 1945 at Ft. Sheridan and his platoon had to stand in line to sign their names and he was so surprised because so many people couldn't sign their names. One guy came up and said that he couldn't sign his name and the officer standing there said to just put an X on the line and as people went by so many put an X on the line.

"Stan had to stand in line to get shots. As you passed two doctors, one on each side would stick the shots in both shoulders.

"My grandfather got trench mouth and was in the forts hospital for a couple of weeks.

"At basic camp in Ft. Bragg he climbed walls a lot. One time his platoon had to crawl as machine guns shot over their heads so they couldn't get up. That doesn't seem very hard but they had to crawl on poison ivy. Stan and his platoon had to march with a full pack 15 miles in sand. One time they were going across a ravine on a rope and a private fell and broke his neck and died. When my Grandfather was training with a bazooka there were two dummy tanks set out in a field and he aimed between them hoping if it sailed left or right it would hit one. When he shot it went right where he aimed and missed them both. When Stan was training with the 50 caliber machinegun two people had to hold him down because of the recoil. One time the holders were late and he almost shot out the engines on the half track the gun was on was mounted on.

"He stayed at Ft. Bragg in the artillery and there was a special showing where General Patton was demonstrating a new shell that exploded about 15 feet above the ground and threw shrapnel down into fox holes to kill the men in them. After a year and a half it was time for furlough. He put in for over seas but didn't get to go. Instead he returned to Ft. Bragg it had turned into a paratrooper fort and since he was with the artillery he got transferred to Ft. Knox.

"He was in one of the tank corps and taught trainees how to drive tanks. The tank he drove was the best we had it was the m-31 medium tank. It had a 105 Howitzer and a 50 caliber machinegun on it. The fun part was that he got to make his own roads so he would plow down trees as he drove around Ft. Knox. He was a T-5, Corporal technician. Stan once had a trainee freeze at the wheel and they slammed into an oil barrel house filled with crude oil, luckily it didn't explode.

"When you get on a tank you climb up the back using anything you can use to help get up. You turn by pulling up on a lever on your left and right. The gas pedals are at your feet and it's really hard to see. You get a lot of bruises because of the bumpy ride and that the inside is all metal. Stan also was on Ft. Knox's baseball team. Each fort had its own team and in 1947 my grandfather's team won the ARMY championship. He also batted against Johnny Van Der Meer which soon became a St. Louis Cardinals. Stan played second base. My Grandfather left the army in 1948." Source: Daniel HASS, May 1996.
